OVERVIEW

What we're building

A clear, fast three-page website that does one job: get someone who needs a gate to pick up the phone. No clutter, nothing to learn, and nothing that gets in the way.

Home

What you do, why people choose you, and a sample of recent work. Two ways to get in touch, visible from the moment the page loads.

Gallery

Your work, full width, filterable by type. Photos open full size. This is the page that sells the job.

Contact

An enquiry form that emails you directly, alongside your phone number, email, address and opening hours.

The thinking behind it

- Built for your customer. Someone in their forties to seventies, often on a phone in their own driveway. Body text is set larger than usual and contrast is kept high.
- Your phone number never scrolls away. On a mobile there is a permanent bar at the bottom of the screen: Call now and Get a quote.
- Photographs do the selling. The layout is deliberately quiet so the work stands out rather than competing with the design.
- Fast and simple. No page builder, no plugins to update, nothing that can break on its own. It will load quickly even on a poor signal.

THE LOOK

Colour and type

The scheme is called Ironstone — a near-black with a deep oxblood red. It was chosen over brighter options because it reads as established and serious rather than fashionable, and because it works as well printed on a van or a business card as it does on a screen.

Ironstone

#1f1e1c

Oxblood

#9c3327

Warm off-white

#f6f4f1

Deep base

#141312

Paper

#ffffff

Oxblood is used sparingly — buttons, links and small marks only. Everything else is black, white and warm grey, so the accent still means “do this” when a visitor sees it.

Typefaces

Headings

Bitter — a sturdy slab serif. Solid and traditional without being old-fashioned.

Body text

Libre Franklin — chosen for plain readability at a larger size than most sites use.

A note on the screenshots that follow

The pages are shown with placeholder photography — the grey panels with a gate outline. Those are stand-ins for your own photographs. Typefaces in these images are also close substitutes rather than the final Bitter and Libre Franklin, which load from the web when the site is live. Layout, colour, spacing and wording are all exactly as they will be.

The home page as a visitor first sees it.

- The headline says plainly what you make.
- Two actions, side by side: request a quote, or call.
- One quiet line of proof underneath — years in the trade, gates fitted, insured.
- A large photograph of finished work, straight away.
- Your phone number sits in the header on every page.
- Four services, described in a sentence each. No jargon.

Why people choose us

✓ No sub-contractors. The person who measures your

Further down the home page.

The four photographs update themselves. They are pulled straight from your gallery, so the newest work you upload appears here without anyone editing the page.

Four reasons, not twenty. No sub-contractors, a fixed price in writing, safety-tested and certified, and a workmanship guarantee. These are the things that decide whether someone rings you rather than the next firm.

Gallery

The gallery, with filter buttons across the top.

Adding photos takes no technical knowledge

There is no list to edit and nothing to log into. You copy photographs into a folder on the server and they appear on the website.

- Drop a photo into the folder → it appears on the gallery, newest first.
- Delete a photo → it disappears.
- Put photos into sub-folders — Driveway gates, Railings — and those become the filter buttons automatically.
- The file name becomes the caption, so oak-clad-electric-gates.jpg reads as “Oak clad electric gates”.

Viewing a photograph

Tapping any photograph opens it full size.

Visitors can move between photographs with the arrows, the keyboard, or by swiping on a phone. It closes with the cross or the escape key. Small thing, but it is how people expect a gallery to behave, and it keeps them looking at your work for longer.

The enquiry form, with your details alongside it.

- Enquiries arrive by email at info@westhead-gates.co.uk.
- Replying to that email goes straight back to the customer.
- No monthly fee and no third-party form service.
- Three layers of spam protection, so you are not chasing junk.
- The form checks itself as it is filled in, which means fewer enquiries with a mistyped phone number.
- Your phone, email, address and opening hours sit beside it.

Most people will see this version

More than half of enquiries to a business like yours come from a mobile — usually from someone standing on their own driveway. The site was laid out for that first.

Home, on a phone.

Gallery, single column.

The bar along the bottom

Notice the two buttons fixed to the bottom of the screen — Call now and Get a quote. They never scroll away, and they sit where a thumb naturally rests. On a trade website this one detail typically brings in more calls than everything above it put together.

SCOPE

What's included

Pages	Home, gallery, contact, plus a privacy notice and a “page not found” page.
Self-updating gallery	Add and remove photographs by copying files into a folder. No login, no admin panel, nothing to learn.
Enquiry form	Emails you directly, with spam protection. Works even if a visitor has JavaScript turned off.
Mobile and tablet	Every page tested at desktop, tablet and phone widths.
Search engine basics	Page titles and descriptions, a sitemap, structured business information, and social sharing previews.
Speed	No page builder and no plugins. Fewer things to go wrong and nothing to keep updated.
Hosting	Runs on your existing Plesk server. No new subscriptions.
Accessibility	Larger body text, high contrast, keyboard navigation and proper labelling throughout.

Not included at this stage

Photography, copywriting beyond what is shown, online payments, a booking system, and individual pages for each service or town. Any of these can be added later — the site is built so that extra pages slot in without a rebuild.

What we need from you

The design is finished. These are the pieces only you can supply.

Photographs	The single most important item. Ten to twenty of your best finished jobs. Bright but overcast days work best, taken straight on and from a few steps back. These replace every grey panel in this document.
Phone numbers	The landline and mobile you want shown.
The proof line	Years in the trade, roughly how many gates you have fitted, and the length of your workmanship guarantee. If any of these are not accurate, we leave them off rather than round them up.
Address and hours	Workshop address and your opening times.
Company details	Company number and VAT number for the footer.
Privacy notice	Required by law once the enquiry form is live. We will draft it; you confirm it is accurate.

Worth being straight about

A website like this stands or falls on its photographs. Everything else is in place and tested. If the photographs are good, the site will do its job; if they are phone snaps taken in the rain, no amount of design will make up for it. It is worth setting aside an afternoon for this.

How we get it live

- 1 You approve the design. Anything in this document can still change — colours, wording, the order of sections. It is far easier now than later.
- 2 You send the details and photographs from the previous page.
- 3 We fill everything in and send you a private link to review the real site before anyone else can see it.
- 4 You have a proper look on your own phone and computer, and tell us anything that needs changing.
- 5 We put it live on your domain, with a security certificate, and test the enquiry form end to end.

Afterwards

Adding photographs is yours to do whenever you like. If you would rather we handled it, or you want to add service or area pages later to bring in more search traffic, that can be quoted separately.
